

PHM Health Systems Circle Webinar-The Struggles of Community Health Workers at the Covid Frontline: Essential but Unrecognised

Concept Note

CHWs have been on the frontline in educating their communities about COVID-19: how to prevent it, how to manage the illness, and why vaccinations are safe and important public health interventions. Many governments - and indeed even global agencies like the WHO - have described them as healthcare heroes. Nevertheless, these heroes continue to be treated poorly. CHWs' working conditions have not improved during the COVID-19 pandemic. Despite their services being needed more than ever, their contracts remain informal or short-term, they generally do not have access to employer-provided PPE, and their payments continue to be low and erratic. Like other "essential workers" in low-wage and insecure employment, CHWs have struggled to secure childcare services - something that has been needed during lockdowns where schools have closed and children are home, but parents in essential services continue working. In many countries, CHWs have had to work under circumstances characterised by high levels of militarisation, that have been aimed at policing lockdown regulations but also at stamping down popular protests that have emerged in opposition to the high levels of socioeconomic insecurity resulting from the pandemic and its management. In this webinar CHWs from across the world report on the past year: how their health care work has changed, how their working conditions have been affected, how their wellbeing has been affected, and also what strategies they have been using to organise for better employment conditions now that governments are relying on their labour more than ever!
